Anna In Charge

Book Twelve

It was a beautiful morning in Arendelle, and everyone was in a good mood. Everyone, that is, except Princess Anna.

"I wish you didn't have to go this convention, Elsa," Anna said.

Elsa smiled at her sister. "I won't be gone long, Anna, I promise."

Anna sighed. She didn't like to be away from her sister for even a little while.

"Remember, while I'm gone, you're in charge," Elsa said.

"What if I don't know what to do?" Anna asked.

Elsa gave her sister a hug. "Don't worry," she said. "I've written down some tips on how to rule. You'll be fine. And I'll be back before you know it."

In her room, Anna flopped down in her most comfortable chair to read Elsa's note. Just then, there was a knock on the door, and one of the castle guards entered the room.

"Excuse me, Your Highness," the guard said. "You are needed in the throne room. Two farmers are having a disagreement."

Anna's heart pounded loudly. There couldn't be a problem already!

Anna followed the guard to the throne room, where two farmers were shouting at each other. Their voices were so loud that they didn't hear Anna enter the room.

"Excuse me," she said softly. But the two men kept yelling.

Finally, the guard whistled sharply. The farmers became silent and turned toward Anna.

"Thank you," Anna said. "Now what seems to be the problem?"

"His chickens get loose and are eating all of my corn," one farmer shouted.

"Well, his cows keep eating all the grass in my field," the other farmer yelled back.

Anna listened to the farmers. Each of them thought he was right. How was she supposed to solve their problem? Then Anna remembered Elsa's note.

Anna opened the note and quickly read the first few lines. Problems can be hard to solve, Elsa had written. You have a good heart. Do what you think is right.

Anna bit her lip. What do I think is right? she asked herself silently. She had listened to both sides of the argument. And she had seen that both men had a point.

"I have an idea!" Anna said, jumping up. "Let the chickens eat the corn. The cows can eat the grass. And you both can share the milk and eggs!"

The farmers looked at each other. Then they slowly nodded. They both liked that idea! As the two men walked away arm in arm, Anna smiled. She had solved her first problem as queen!

The farmers had barely left the throne room when Olina came in.

"Pardon me, Your Highness," she said. "The Royal Regatta is about to start and the Arendelle team is one person short. They might not be able to compete!"

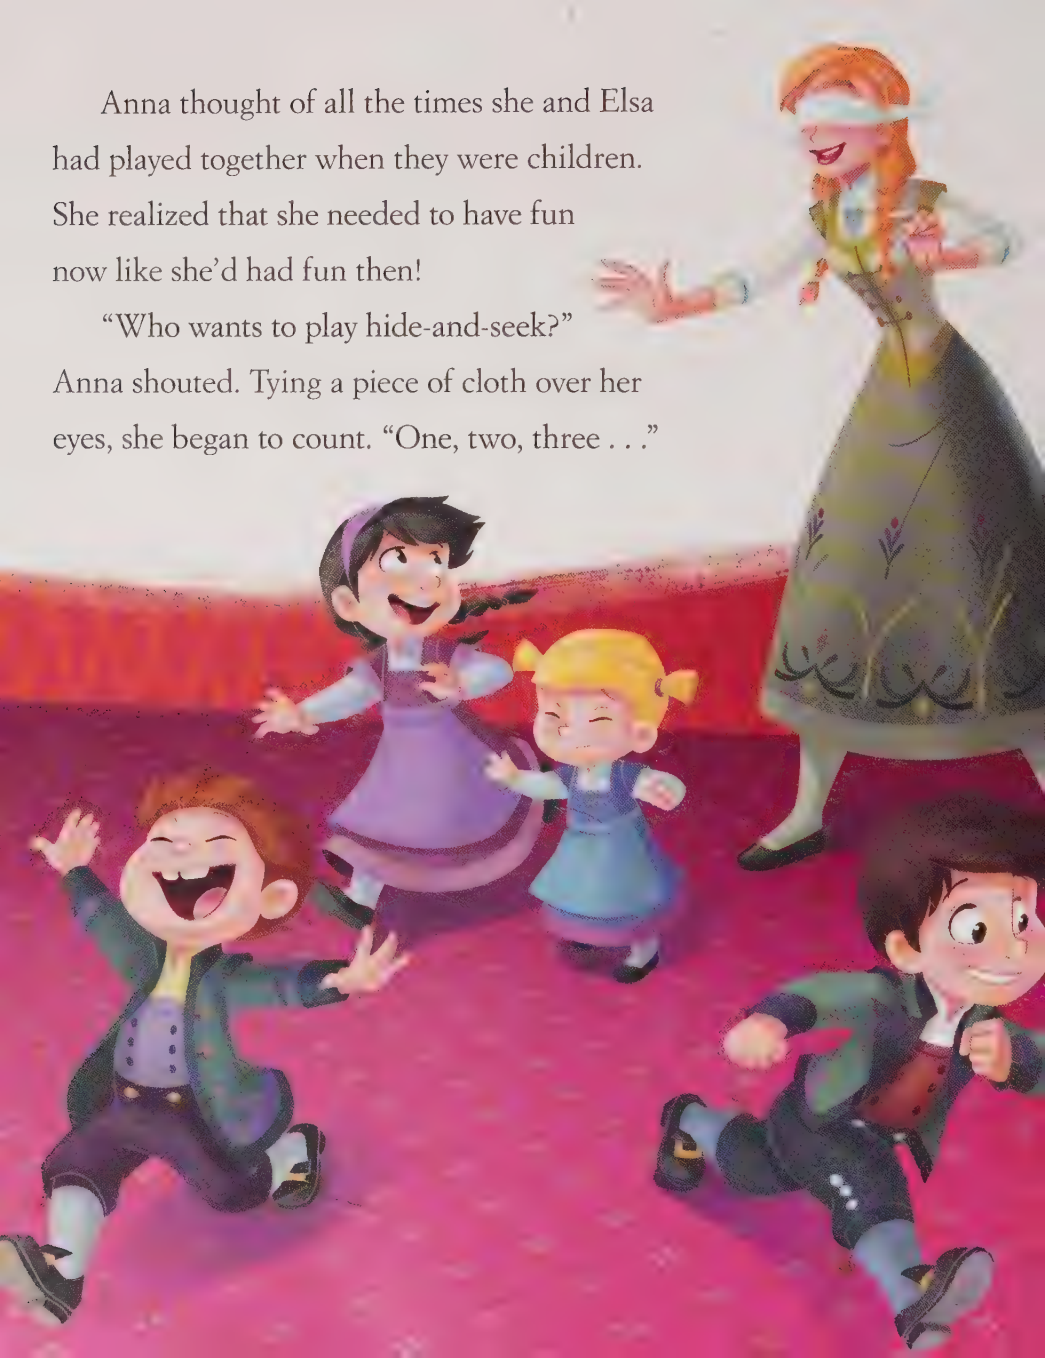
Anna looked out the window at the boats lined up for the race. It would be a shame for Arendelle to have to drop out of the race, but what could she do about it? Quickly, Anna opened Elsa's note. I hope you aren't bored. Don't be afraid to mix it up! That gave Anna an idea.

I've got it! I'll help the team! she thought. Racing down to the water, Anna found Arendelle's team. She jumped into the boat and began to row. When the race was over, Arendelle's boat had come in second place! Anna was happy that she had helped the team! But her day was just getting started.

Next she had a visit with a group of children. Taking a deep breath, Anna walked into the schoolroom. Once again, she pulled out Elsa's note. You have a great big heart, Elsa had written. Use it to have fun.

Anna thought of all the times she and Elsa had played together when they were children. She realized that she needed to have fun now like she'd had fun then!

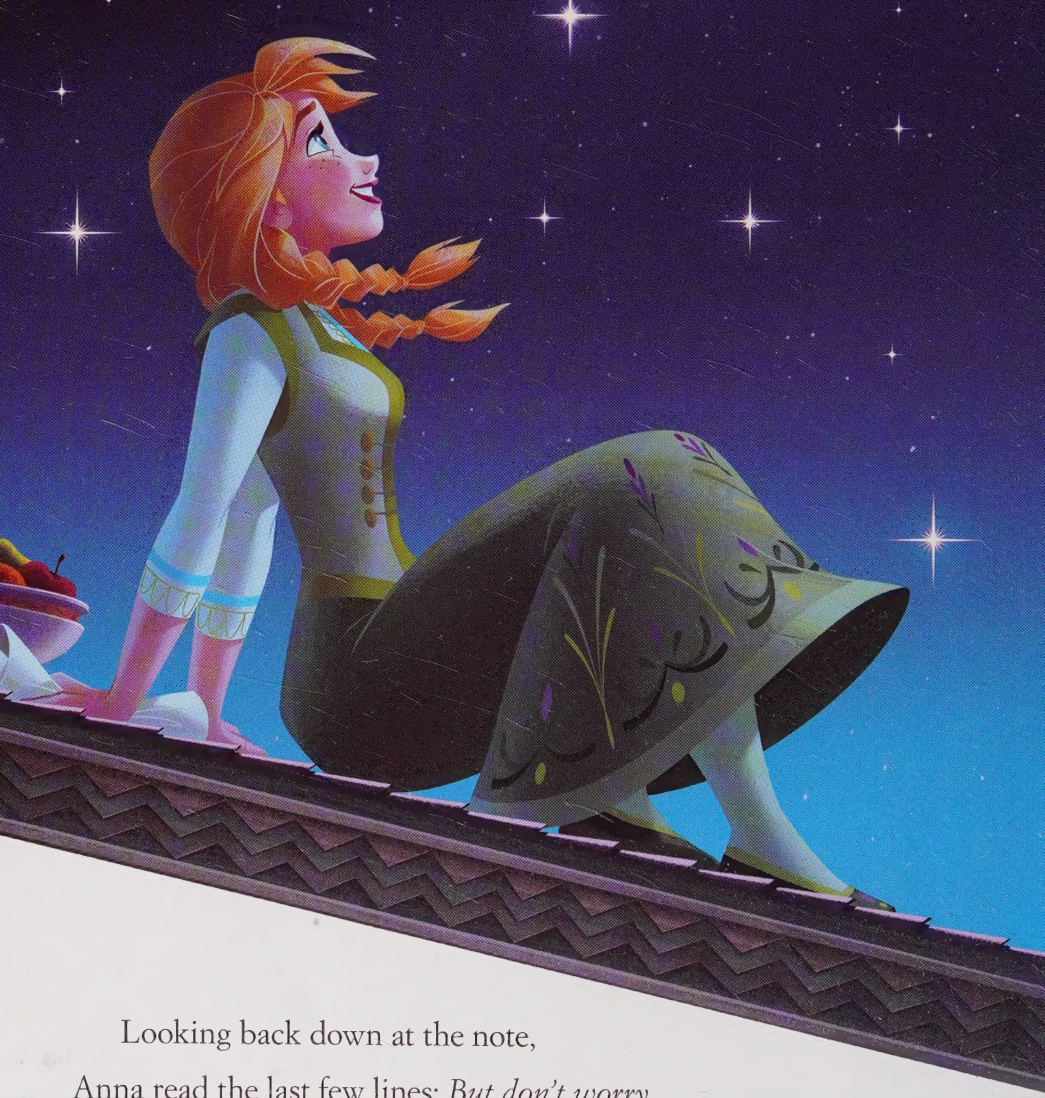
"Who wants to play hide-and-seek?" Anna shouted. Tying a piece of cloth over her eyes, she began to count. "One, two, three . . ."



The rest of Anna's day flew by. She inspected the troops. She met with the cook to review the menu for the ice harvester dinner the following week. At the end of the day, Anna went back to the harbor to watch the rest of the boat races and cheer on the other teams. When the races were finished, she went to the awards ceremony to greet all of Arendelle's guests!

Before Anna realized it, the sun was setting and the stars were beginning to appear in the sky. Plopping down in a chair, she let out a huge sigh of relief. Suddenly, Anna realized that she hadn't finished reading Elsa's note. She opened the scroll. After a busy day, it is nice to see the stars. The best view is from the roof.

With the note in her hand, Anna climbed up to the roof. To her surprise, there was a picnic dinner laid out. Next to the food was another note addressed to her. Good job today, Elsa had written. You can be me anytime! Anna gasped. She didn't know if she was ready for that!



Looking back down at the note, Anna read the last few lines: But don't worry. I'll be back tomorrow. Anna let out another sigh of relief.

Being in charge was a lot of fun, but having Elsa home would be even better!
